RA unbracketed ellipsis indicates an interruption or pause in speech. In writing, the ellipsis is represented by three dots ("..."). [10] Toronto: Pearson Longman

The most common character corresponding to an ellipsis is called "three-dot leader". Depending on the context, this could be anything from an admission of guilt to an expression of being dumbfounded at another person's words or actions. doi:10.1177/1461445610392138 When the suppressed text is at the beginning or at the end of a text, the ellipse does not need to be placed in a parenthesis. The precise meaning varies by language, but it generally involves something dealing with multiple items. Retrieved 2015-10-18

Bringhurst writes that a full space between each dot is "another Victorian eccentricity". The stylebook indicates that if the shortened sentence before the mark can stand as a sentence, it should do so, with an ellipsis placed after the period or other ending punctuation. However, any omitted word, phrase or line at the end of a quoted passage would be indicated like this: [...] (space before and after the square brackets but not inside). In the 19th and early 20th centuries, an ellipsis was often used when a writer intentionally omitted a specific proper noun, such as a location: "Jan was born on ... Street in Warsaw." With the `amsmath` package from AMS-LaTeX, more specific ellipses are provided for math mode. [27] Aposiopesis is the use of an ellipsis to trail off into silence. For example: "But I thought he was 15 . . .", 2006 2c3f341067
